the chromium story

Chromium is named in honor of Midtown's co-founder, Kevie Schwartz. In 1923, while pursuing his Master's in Chemical Engineering at Columbia University, Schwartz developed a process for electroplating that would ultimately be used for both commercial and military purposes. Schwartz discovered that the use of chromium as a soluble anode in acid chromium depositing baths containing CrO as the main electrolyzable component led to a more efficient plating process. In 1924 and 1928, he received patents for his invention. In 1943 he was awarded the Army/Navy "E" for Excellence and made an Honorary Captain of The Port of New York for using specialized electroplating solutions to materially extend the life of airplane engines and submarine impellers for the war effort in WWII. Here in Chicago, he developed the process to chromium plate the massive photogravure cylinders used by the Chicago Tribune to print large runs of the Sunday paper. Chromium celebrates our heritage and is an important part of our community.
